THIS BRONZE MEMORIAL TABLET TO HONOR LATE JUDGE MALONE

As a memorial to the memory of the late Judge Waiter Malone, one of the city's jurists and one of the best-known poets in the South, a handsome bronze and granite memorial will be erected in Court square at an approximate cost of $2,000. Funds for the memorial are now being solicited.

Only the base of the proposed memorial to the late Judge Waiter Malone, poet an dauthor, will be unveiled during the centenary celebration here May 21-21, according to plans decided upon Thursday evening at a meeting of the memorial committee held at the Chamber of Commerce. It was found impossible to unveil the bronze tablet at that time as it will not be ready. The granite base, however, will be dedicated with appropriate ceremonies.

UNCLE WIGGILY AND HIS RUBBERS.

(Copyright, 1919, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

BY HOWARD R. GARIS.

Once again it rained in Woodland, near the Orange Ice Mountains, where Uncle Wiggily Longoars, the bunny rabbit gentleman, lived in a hollow stump bungalow with Nurse Jan Furzy Wuzzy, his muskrat lady housekeeper.

'I never saw it rain so hard!' Said Nurse Jane, as the stood near a window, looking at the drops as they chased one another down the glass.

"Surely you are not going out in this storm, Uncle Wiggily."

'Oh, yes, I am!' cried the bunny, twinkling his pink nose, cheerful-like and informal. 'I have my umbrella to keep my feed dry. I'm going over and see Grandpa Goosey Gander. Uncle Butter, the goat gentleman, told me Grandpa had a cold in his yellow bill, and I want to see how ill he is."

"Well, be careful, and be sure not to forget your rubbers, and don't get your feet wet!" said Nurse Jane.

"Til try!" promised Uncle Wiggily.

So out into the April rain shower went the bunny, and soon he was at Grandpa Goosey's house. And there he found matters very sad, indeed. For Grandpa Goosey was very ill, and Aunt Lettle, the goat lady, had come in to nurse him.

"What's the matter with him?" asked Uncle Wiggily of Aunt Lettle, after the bunny had zone up to see Grandpa Goosey' said it stops raining."

Goossy was very ill, and Aunt Lettle, he goat lady, had come in to nurse him.

"What's the matter with him?" asked Uncle Wiggily of Aunt Lettle, after the bunny had gone up to see Grandpa Goossy in bed.

"Oh, he is so cold all the time," said Aunt Lettle. "I have to keep rubber hot water bags at his feet all the time. And I had to send out and get Jimmle Mibblewobble, the duck, to go and bring a new hot water bags from the seven and sight-cent store. The old hot water bags Grandpa Goossy had were not large cpough."

"Well, surell, he must be quite ill." saidly the while? That's too bad! Well, surell, he must be quite ill." saidly the while? That's too bad! Well, I'll stay a while and see if I can help you, Aunt Lettle. It is very good of you to come to help Grandpa Goossy. I'll send Nurse Jane over when I go back."

"Oh, she needn't come in all this rain!" bleated Aunt Lettle. "Lett her wait until the shower is over."

So Uncle Wiggily, who had left his rubbers and umbrella out on Grandpa Goossy's front porch, sat in the gander gentleman's house, hoping his quacking friend would soon get well.

And while Uncle Wiggily was there,

WHO'S TO BLAME

BY ETHEL LLOYD PATTERSON

Apparently there was nothing to do except let poor Freddie sleep on the floor another night. The beds and mattresses had not been delivered to Estreida's and Freddie's new apartment. Estreida berself had sleet quite comfortably the previous night on the one couch they had. This circumstance may in a measure have accounted for her bland disregard of more appropriate arrangements.

"What did they say about the beds, Sweetle?" Freddie had asked his hride on the second evening of his hone-coming.

"What do you mean, what did they say?" she asked him.

"Well you phoned about them or "Suppose she's had hers," he thought to himself.

The tub was scarcely larger than a foot tub. Only that morning Freddle had discovered that, to get wet all over in it, required no mean understanding of maneuver. So now he viewed its furnishings with honest dismay. He had, as a matter of fact, planned to take a nice, warm tub before retiring. "Well—what in—?" he began.
"Now what's the matter with you?" demanded Estrelda.

Everything that she had not wanted for immediate arrangement of the new apartment she had piled in the bathroom in the tub. The kitchen utensils were at the bottom of the heap; smaller articles, cushions, several vases and a muffin rack made the center layer, while poised precarlously at the top there, balanced a "Boston fern" in a fancy not.

"I can't take a bath in the basin!"
said Freddle.
"Well." said Fred. said Freddle.

"Well," said Estrelda, "you can't take a bath in the tub, so that settles that!"

"But, dear," he began. He felt like pleading. To begin with, the boy had been brought up fastidiously. To end will preach at Holy Trinity church Friwith, he was too good an all-round day night at 8 o'clock.

"You could have said the beds hadn't come," nurmured Freddie: then catching Estreida's expression, "but it doesn't matter. I'll look after it tomorrow. Gee whiz-Fm kind of tired I think if you don't mind. I'll turn in. "Oh, do anything you like," Estreida told him rudely.

Freddle was really too weary to protest. It crossed his mind that some time when he felt better he would try to suggest to his wife that she speak less abruptly. Doubtless it was only a mannerism. "Or probably," he thought, "she's nervously tired. It's only natural that she should be; she's just a girl all alone almost in a new home." He klased the top of her head lightly and very tenderly as he passed her on his way to the bathroom.

Now that same hathroom was very tiny indeed under the bast of circumstances.

The tub was scarcely larger than a

From what a deputy sheriff told local policemen, they must have been able to scent a "springer" for a quarter mile or more. But few hen roosts were missed.

HUNGRY FOR SWEETS. Thieves using a brick, that had been muffled, Thursday night, broke a display window at the Mr. Bowers store No. 2, 399 Vance avenue. Cakes were the only things stolen from the stock. The police attribute the work to boys.

How Twenty-One Million Citizens Would Vote On A League of Nations

A Poll of Forty-Eight States

What is undoubtedly the most complete reflection of public opinion on the League of Nations which it is possible to make, is shown in THE LITERARY DIGEST for April 5th.

Assuming that newspaper editors all over the country watch the drift of public opinion in their districts, "The Digest" wrote to the editor of every daily newspaper in the United States asking his attitude toward "joining the proposed League of Nations." He was also asked to tell, if possible, the attitude of his community toward it. The response to this letter broke all records, 1,377 editors having replied, losing no time about it-even telegraphing. Many took the trouble to hunt up their editorials on the subject, clip them out, and send them along. The leading article in "The Digest" this week analyzes the result of the poll from different angles, by geographical divisions, by the number of people represented by the circulations of the newspapers (more than $1,000,000) etc. Many of the replies are picturesque, running the gamut of human emotion from "I don't think Mr. Wilson the last word in wisdom or the only American to be trusted," to the other extreme "we are with old Woodrow all the timeno deserters in this section."
